1. THE HEADLINE

Peter Broida mentioned JRS publicly twice, unprompted, in July 2026, and explicitly disclaimed endorsement on the record. The relationship ran four contacts over five days, ended warmly, and has had no contact since 15 July 2026.

Last actual contact: 15 July 2026, 2:49 PM — his reply closing the loop. Everything after that date is internal decision-making, not correspondence.

| 2 | 10 July 2026          | Him → public  | Newsletter mention. Dewey News and Case Alert , Issue #18-07, author Peter Broida, as an "Extra Credit Reading Assignment"                                                                                                                          |
| 3 | 10 July 2026          | Him → Phillip | Emailed that he had forwarded the site to Dewey's investigation-book authors , "glad to be of help"                                                                                                                                                        |
| 4 | ~10–14 July           | Phillip → him | Grateful reply (co-publishing question deliberately held back)                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| 5 | 15 July 2026          | Phillip → him | Founding-access offer , "An invitation, in thanks"                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| 6 | 15 July 2026          | Him → Phillip | Soft no + referral. Dewey publishes, it is not a training reseller. Referred three federal-sector training organisations, saying they "might well be interested in having you as a trainer"                                                                |
| 7 | 15 July 2026          | Phillip → him | Thank-you reply, no re-pitch                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| 8 | 15 July 2026, 2:49 PM | Him → Phillip | Final message. "No offense taken. You've got something to offer the civil service world. I am reasonably sure each of the organizations I mentioned offers training for investigators. peter"                                                              |

Nothing since. The recorded decision was do not reply again — bank it on the high note.

3. THE PODCAST, IN DETAIL

Episode: "July 6th, 2026", The Dewey Publications Podcast, published 7 July 2026, host Peter Broida. Link: <https://podcasts.apple.com/us/podcast/the-dewey-publications-podcast/id888037481?i=1000775802123> Chapter: "Investigation Guide Resource".

What he said, per Apple's in-app transcript (supplied by Phillip as 4 screenshots, verified 14 July 2026):

- Called the Field Guide "darn good... succinct"
- Described it as written for "EEO intake counseling investigations and pre-finalization review of administrative investigation records"

- Spelled out "jrsstandard.com" aloud
- Explicitly disclaimed endorsement: "And I'm not endorsing it, nor is Dewey."

Verification caveats, recorded honestly at the time

1. The transcript is Apple's AUTO-GENERATED one, labelled "Automatically created transcript". Not authoritative verbatim.
2. It mis-renders the name as "Philip Wicks" / "Wicks". Broida verbally spelled "W-I-K-E-S" and said "I hope I got that right."
3. A timestamp discrepancy was found and corrected. An earlier "23:45 mark" claim was inconsistent with the episode header showing "18 min". The 23:45 claim was removed from the prospectus; the transcript carries no timestamps, so no exact mark is asserted.
4. No authoritative transcript exists. Checked the Apple episode page (none web-exposed) and the publisher RSS `deweypub.com/podcast.xml` (no `<podcast:transcript>` tag). Audio could not be transcribed.
5. Double-verified independently via the Apple listing plus publisher RSS `<description>` and `<itunes:summary>`: the episode does list "Resources for investigators: www.jrsstandard.com".

Full episode topics per the feed: OPM/MSPB proposed regulations; Slaughter (summary removal authority); Jackler litigation (Federal Circuit); Resources for investigators; buy Dewey books.

4. THE NEWSLETTER, IN DETAIL

Dewey Publications, News and Case Alert, Issue #18-07, 10 July 2026, author Peter Broida. Verified in writing via screenshots, 14 July 2026. Listed as an "Extra Credit Reading Assignment."

Exact quote, quotable from its text:

"for those of you who are involved in agency investigations, or rely on them, check out the website of www.jrsstandard.com. Its creator and author, Phillip Wikes, a former civil rights officer, offers good guidance on proper assembly and quality controls for investigations and investigators. Take a look at the Investigator Field Guide and Justification Review Standard."

This satisfied Playbook Tier 1 item 5, "get the Broida mention in writing."

Citation rule on file: the newsletter may be quoted from its text; the podcast is cited by episode notes only, never by a transcript.

5. THE FOUNDING-ACCESS OFFER AND THE SOFT NO

Sent 15 July 2026. Subject: "An invitation, in thanks." Full text at `research/Broida_Founding_Access_Offer.md`.

The offer: free JRS training plus companion guide for Dewey's customers, delivered by one private link (`training.html?access=9f4c2a7db6e1`, internally tagged `dewey`). No charge ever, nothing to sign, nothing asked in return.

Two honesty disclosures built into the offer itself: that JRS is still in validation, and that the certificate reflects completion, not accreditation or endorsement.

His answer: a soft no. Dewey publishes; it is not a training reseller, so the "offer it to your customers" premise did not fit the business. The offer had misread how Dewey works.

But it was not a rejection. He wrapped the no in an effortful referral to three federal-sector training organisations and said they "might well be interested in having you as a trainer" — vouching for Phillip's credibility as a trainer.

Phillip's reply (`research/Broida_Reply_ThankYou.md`) acknowledged the misread in one line, did not re-pitch, did not over-apologise, and thanked him for the referral.

His final word, same day, 2:49 PM: "No offense taken. You've got something to offer the civil service world." Signature block on file: Peter Broida, Suite 211, 4620 Cherry Hill Rd., Arlington, VA 22207.

6. THE THREE REFERRALS, AND HOW THEY ENDED

| Organisation                                        | Named person                                            | Contact used                                       |
|-----------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------|
| FELTG (Federal Employees Law Training Group) | Deborah J. Hopkins, President                           | <code>info@feltg.com</code> — a general inbox      |
| Gilbert Training Group                       | Gary M. Gilbert, former EEOC Chief Administrative Judge | no public email; contact form / 301-608-0880       |
| LRP                                          | Seth Supran                                             | <code>conferences@lrp.com</code> — a general inbox |

Emails drafted and sent 16 July 2026 (`research/Referral_Outreach_Emails.md`), each with a per-organisation `src` tag. None of the three responded. No enrolment or download in the live data ever carried `feltg`, `lrp` or `gilbert`.

Why the silence was not a demand signal

A diagnosis dated 13 August 2026 found three causes, in the emails themselves:

1. They were told not to reply. All three closed with "no reply needed." Three non-responses to an email that asked nothing and waived a reply is the email working as written.
2. The ask did not match the referral. Broida's opening was "having you as a trainer." The emails offered free guides and a training link. Nobody asked to be a trainer — the door he opened was never walked through.
3. Two of three went to a general inbox rather than the named person.

Rewritten follow-ups were prepared on 13 August: six lines each, named recipient, one ask — a trainer slot — and no repeat of the free-materials pitch.

The closure — 23 August 2026

They were never sent. Owner's determination:

"They are not at all interested, Broida was just blowing me off."

The channel was closed. `scripts/close_referral_channel.py` removed the referrals from all three forward-looking plans and marked both outreach drafts WITHDRAWN — DO NOT SEND.

The history was deliberately preserved, on the stated principle that a tracker that deletes its own history is worthless, and because the record of a closed channel is what stops it being reopened by accident.

The cost was stated rather than absorbed: removing the referrals cost roughly 15 points. Training or curriculum engagement within 12 months moved from 35–50% down to 20–30%, and paid engagement within 6 months from 55–70% down to 40–55%.

7. STANDING RULES ABOUT HIM

These are on the record and still binding:

1. Never represent either mention as an endorsement. He disclaimed it twice — on air ("I'm not endorsing it, nor is Dewey") and by implication in his reply. Named in the Playbook's "never" list alongside fabricating data.
2. Do not thank him in any research article. Acknowledging him would imply the endorsement he declined and read as borrowing credibility from a peer reviewer. Gratitude stays in private email. Citing the public mention with its non-endorsement caveat is fine; thanking him in acknowledgments is not. Sole exception: a future paper he actually reviews, credited to that specific act, approved by him in writing first.

3. "Something to offer the civil service world" is personal encouragement, not an endorsement. Not for buyer-facing or research materials.
  4. Cadence is the risk, not the offer. His sequence was unsolicited mention → podcast → forwarded to authors → then received an ask. One ask is fine; a pattern tips "I discovered good work" into "this person keeps bringing me requests."
  5. The next touch must be a GIVE, not an ask. Recommended trigger on file: the November CEP Magazine publication — a real third-party editorial milestone, and a pure give with no ask attached.

8. WHERE HE APPEARS IN LIVE MATERIALS

- acquisition-9f3c2a7d4b.html (private acquisition prospectus) — both mentions cited, with the non-endorsement stated expressly in the same sentence.
  - IP Sale Tracker — newsletter listed as "Quotable from its text. NOT an endorsement"; podcast as "Cite by episode notes only. Broida explicitly disclaimed endorsement on air."
  - Referral channel — marked CLOSED. Owner's determination, 2026-08-13. Not to be reopened.

9. ASSESSMENT

What he gave: two unprompted public mentions from a respected federal-sector publisher, one quotable in writing; a forward to Dewey's investigation-book authors; three named referrals; and an unprompted vote of confidence in Phillip as a trainer. None of it asked for, none of it paid for.

What he declined: endorsement, twice and explicitly. Distribution of the training, because Dewey does not do that.

Where it stands: warm, closed on a high note, dormant by choice since 15 July 2026. The referral channel derived from it is closed on the owner's read of the relationship. The relationship itself was never damaged — his own last words settle that.

The one live thread: a give-only note when the CEP article publishes in November. Nothing else is queued, and nothing is to be sent to him or to the three referrals.
